

- Film revolves around the difference between the lives when we have our loved ones and when we don't
- No dialogue - use colour and surroundings to tell the story.
- Filming in SDMC
- Two friends, close, but not cheesy stuff, just a daily routine.
- Walking, eating in SOM canteen, stealing food, running up the stairs(?), in the classroom passing notes or writing something down on a paper, and look down and up at her smile, and cut to her looking sad, and show no one next to her walking slowly down the stairs, and pass by the canteen (show happy people in the background), put headphone back on and walk.
- Sunny and warm day, F1 is sitting near SOM with headphones on, bright coloured clothes(?), eating food
- From behind her, F2 smacks or jumps on them, shaking them out of it. F1 takes off headphones (F2 also warm and bright clothes I think)
- F2 sits next to F1 and steals food from F1, F1 tries to smack the hand away but fails
- They laugh and bump shoulders or smthg.
- Running or speed walking up the sdmc stairs and they enter the class and sit next to each other
- F2 writes a note on her book, passing to F1, asking if they wanted to hang out somewhere after classes. (or smthg similar)
- F1 nods, F2 is happy, F1 smiles and stares at F2
- Cut to sadness
- F1 staring at the empty spot next to them (shot from behind) (flower on table? To show death?)
- F1 flipping pages and finds the note and stares at it for a while, before continuing flipping the pages again
- F1 goes down the stairs slowly
- Walks near SDMC area, SOM canteen in the background, little out of focus, people having fun there (wind?)
- F1 puts headphones back on and muffles the cheerful noises and continues walking
- Long shot near the walkway as F1 walks away.